

Clara Carroll

“What Promises of the Preamble to the U.S. Constitution Means the Most to Me and Why?”

The two most important promises of the preamble are the Armed Forces and securing the blessing of Liberty in my opinion. In the paragraph below I will talk about what the armed forces means to me and what America would be like without it. If we didn't have the blessing of Liberty, then we would have no Liberty and nothing we say would matter. These two promises are related. Our armed forces make the blessing of liberty possible by fighting for it and against those countries that would take it away.

The armed forces mean the most to me because it means that they can protect us and we are slowly building up our army. In the past years we have built up our army so much to the point where people don't mess with us. If we didn't have armed forces we wouldn't have been able to fight back against Japan during the Pearl Harbor attack. Thanks to our armed forces, America is a free country. The army is part of what makes America, America.

The second promise that is important to me is securing the blessing of Liberty. One of the signs of free people is having the right to vote. Voting is having a small say in what happens next and who leads next. We would have zero power, zero say, and zero choice without this right. We are lucky because our voices matter. We also have the freedom to work wherever we want or go to whatever church we choose. We are blessed to have the right to choose our leaders and work or study what pleases us.

I am so thankful for these two promises of the preamble to the US Constitution. Our armed forces protect our rights as well as our physical country. Because of the armed forces we were able to fight back and win wars. Individual liberty is very important to Americans. We treasure our rights and this promise protects that. I hate to think about what America would be like without the Constitution or if it would be a place worth living in.