

Preamble Promises

By Madison Broker

236 years ago, our founding fathers decided to lead a free country. For us, the people, they had given us rights and freedoms. For the government, they gave them laws to follow in order to lead. They had gotten away from a monarchy that acted as a dictatorship. So they thought that they would make a country that would give people a right to freedom. They put rules in place for all to follow. They said that even as our leaders they wouldn't be above our new law. They created a country with equal rights for future generations to come.

I think that ensuring domestic tranquility is one of the most important parts of the U.S Preamble because it means that the government has to ensure peace and justice. Why I think this important, is because we, unlike some countries, have a government who has our back in the justice department. They promise to keep justice upheld in a peaceful way no matter what. They try to keep a peaceful environment, which some countries don't have right now. I think the other most important promise of the Preamble is the promise to establish justice. This promise has been the one to save the most lives and made this one, if not the most, important. This promise states that no matter what you look like you will get the same amount of justice as your neighbor. Everyone has the same rights as each other thus giving us equality. The government has sworn to protect these rights equally, meaning that no one gets favored, and there is justice for all and fairness for everyone

One of my examples of ensuring domestic tranquility is a courtroom. Why I chose this is because this part of the government has to try to ensure peace and justice on both sides. Another example is the police who have sworn to try to ensure domestic tranquility. Why I chose this is because if they can't ensure justice and peace then people might think they are all by themselves, possibly throwing us into chaos.

My third example of this is how the government is able to change laws to fix problems, like the first amendment which states that the government can't make laws that ban certain religious practices. This makes it so they can change rules accordingly fixing a problem that the people find unfair or unjust. There are many ways that our government ensures domestic tranquility. They help to protect our rights and our country, with the people.

I think that another important promise of the Preamble is the promise to establish justice. This promise states that you don't have to look a certain way to get certain rights. The government has to swear to protect our rights as they take office. People like the police sometimes give their lives to ensure justice. They can ensure justice by assisting at accidents, maintaining public order, or enforcing law. Another example of this is, again a courtroom. They give justice on both sides of the problem. Fixing the problem in a way that helps the people on each side of the problem for the most part to work it out. Finally my last example is our rights. We have the same rights as each other, no one gets more, and no one gets less. Our rights could be our best example of equality. There are many ways to bring justice to others, or others bring it to us. Although we think Karma is up there watching, we know that in reality, our best example of justice is equality.

Our forefathers thought that with the hope of a new world, and free people they could achieve just about anything. With the people to back them up, they were able to achieve great feats. As our country grew we have had great leaders, mistakes, and sacrifices. We have learned from our mistakes, and instead of having setbacks we had opportunities. We've taken our chances and opportunities, (good and bad) and know there is more to come.
