

Sawyer Anson

Government

Mrs. Wuelfing

10/1024

Freedoms provided by the First Amendment

What would the world be like without freedom of speech, religion, press, etc.? It might not sound bad at first, but without the First Amendment, you would lose more freedoms than you think.

You couldn't say anything without being scared of punishment from the government. There would be no protests no matter how peaceful they are or what they're about. According to The Constitution, "The First Amendment provides that Congress make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting its free exercise. It protects freedom of speech, the press, assembly, and the right to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." These rules were implemented to limit the government's control over the people and the country's laws.

The First Amendment has five parts: freedom of religion, speech, press, assembly, and petitions. I believe that all of these freedoms are equally important and apply to all citizens of the United States of America. I also believe you can have all these freedoms or none you can't have four without the other one. You can't have the freedom of the press without the freedom of speech, and how is petitioning possible with no freedom of speech? Countries like Cuba and North Korea don't have the freedom of speech and they are horrible places to live. They might not be the poorest countries in the world but they are miserable to live in. Both countries have long histories of tyranny and government overthrows.

The First Amendment also prohibits the government from censorship of media and press. Without this ability the government could regulate all information to the public and all news would be biased. Right now in America I can go online and find just about any topic from multiple points of view. Without the First Amendment information would be limited and only from a biased source to make our government look better. Countries like China and North Korea have government censorship of media and they are some of the worst places to live.

The First Amendment has no age limit it is guaranteed the day your born you don't have to do anything. The First Amendment is not limited to citizenship, any person in the United States of America is allowed First Amendment Protection. It doesn't matter how old you are or where you are from you are guaranteed First Amendment Rights. This makes the United States or America an extremely desirable place to live. America is built on immigration, it is usually called the cultural melting pot of the world where anyone can come legally and prosper. The Constitution of the United States applies to everyone in the united states but rights can be limited to illegal immigrants in the United States.

Freedom of religion is one of the most important freedoms in the First Amendment. Freedom of religion is the reason America was colonated in the first place. The colonists escaped Great Britain and colonized America because they wanted freedom of worship. Freedom of religion was one of the largest driving factors in the creation of the United States. The constitution limits government involvement in religion to keep government out of religion and religion out of government. Freedom of Religion is also tied into freedom of expression, Americans can express whatever they want as long as it isn't harming anyone else.

The First Amendment is unbiased it doesn't favor certain religions, ideas, beliefs, or political stances. The Constitution was made to protect the rights of everyone in the United States, not just one demographic. Some people today believe the Constitution favors the white people who created it and needs to be revised to include different races and identities. I believe this is not true because the Constitution protects everyones freedoms. The Constitution can be interpreted in whatever way you want but its true meaning is for all Americans.