

The Constitution of The United States of America is very important to me. It protects my rights against government overreach. These rights tell me what can and can't be done, and if it affects me or not. The Preamble, Bill of Rights, and the other amendments are some of the fantastically written parts of the Constitution. The Preamble shows why our founding fathers wanted to write this important document. The Bill of Rights is comprised of the first ten amendments. These amendments can range from the very first amendment, which shows that we have the freedom of speech, press, petition, religion, assembly, to the seventh amendment, the right to a jury trial in civil lawsuit. These amendments in the Bill of Rights show my rights as an American and how those rights relate to the government. The rest of the Constitution helps restrict the government and its power. These are things that my teacher teaches me every year. I have learned every amendment and article for three years now. My brother is in high school and he used to come to my school. He said that my teacher prepared him for most of his classes and many other life lessons. The importance of democracy is very large in many different lifestyles. This is very important to me because I can defend myself legally and knowledgeably. One time my school took my class to Washington D.C. and got to watch a court session. This was one of the very few times I got to watch a democratic related meeting. The Constitution protects so much of what America holds. It keeps America going. This is one of the inspiring reasons I decided to write this passage.
