

How the constitution preserves our freedom and why that is important to me.

The constitution preserves our freedom in many different ways and it is very important to me. Without the constitution our country would be a messy place. People would not be able to say things that they believed, or protest against something that is wrong. The government would have all the control. The first amendment is very important to this question because it has all of the freedoms in it such as freedom of religion, freedom of assembly, freedom of petition, freedom of press, and freedom of speech.

All of the freedoms are important but freedom of speech is key. Freedom of speech is important because if we didn't have this no one would be able to say what they want or publicly have an opinion. Good ideas happen when people are able to express their opinions. Not everyone needs to agree on the ideas but it is necessary to hear all sides. It is also important for people to be able to have a voice against the government. If they did not have this freedom the government would be one sided.

Freedom of religion protects me so I can practice any type of religion. It also allows for people to practice religion publicly and privately. The government cannot tell us who we can worship or when we can worship. It also lets us talk openly and freely about religion. It is also important because it allows for people not to have any religion at all.

Freedom of assembly allows us to assemble peacefully. This means people can have meetings, have rallies, protests and strikes. If you get together your voice becomes bigger so the government can see many different views.

Freedom of petition lets us ask the government to fix something or propose a change. This is important because people can change laws. This makes it so the government does not have as much power.

Freedom of press is the right to spread thoughts, ideas and news by publicly publishing them. This is important because when something bad happens we can hear about it. It also is important so different views can be spread around. Without these freedoms people would be silenced and have no right to voice opinions or act in ways they want. These freedom make our country great.
